Food in the crisis.

Today, the agricultural industry dominates food production – all over the world. A huge system of supply chains, dependencies and concentration of power has emerged. It is all about profit – not about good food for everyone.

Fatal consequences. Worldwide.

The consequences are serious: animals are kept en masse, people are driven away or exploited. Soil loses its fertility. Water is becoming a rare commodity. Rivers and lakes are polluted by toxins. Farmers are under great pressure. They have to produce more and more, even though costs are rising and the market is uncertain. The livelihoods of many are being exploited and destroyed for the benefit of a few. At the same time, climate-damaging emissions are increasing. This has dire consequences for agriculture: there is less water, extreme weather is more frequent and new diseases are spreading. One thing is clear: there is enough for everyone – it is just not wanted.

Time for change.

What do we want and need instead? We stand up for a different food system. We are disrupting the destructive system of agribusiness and pointing out concrete alternatives. For solidarity-based, ecological and sustainable agriculture. A food system shaped together with farmers and new processing structures based on solidarity. We need good food for everyone and with everyone.
